WORKSOP,

A MARKET-TOWN, in the hundred of Bassetlaw, and county of Nottingham, is 146 miles from London, 16 from Chesterfield, 26 from Nottingham, 18 from Sheffield, 16 from Doncaster, 29 from Lincoln, and 19 from Gainsborough. The town is small, but neat, and pleasantly seated in a valley near the source of the river Royston. Worksop, anciently Wirkensop, was before the Norman Conquest, the property of a Saxon nobleman. Long afterwards it belonged successively to the families of Furnival, Nevill and Talbot, earls of Shrewsbury. The Talbot estates descending to co-heiresses, a part was conveyed to the Howards earls of Arundel, afterwards dukes of Norfolk, by whom the lands of Worksop are still possessed, and who on this account, enjoy the privileges of furnishing a glove for the king's right hand at his coronation, and of supporting that hand while he holds the sceptre. Worksop was in former times defended by a castle, long ago destroyed; but its site is still pointed out on a circular hill encompassed with a trench, at the west side of the town. Worksop was formerly noted for its monastery, founded by William de Lovetot, in the reign of Henry I. for canons regular of the order of St. Augustine. The institution was subsequently enriched by the gifts of various proprietors of the town; but at the general dissolution its possessions were seized by Henry VIII. Few vestiges of the monastery now remain; but the church partly subsists, and is a noble specimen of ancient architecture. What now remains is but the west end of the original church, with two lofty tower-ers. The west entrance consists of an arch, with zig zag ornaments, whilst the towers have the windows in a gradation of different styles of architecture. The interior of the church, in length about 135 feet, consists of a nave and two aisles; the roof is supported by eight pillars, alternately octangular and cylindrical: the ancient pulpit is still preserved. On the north side of the church are fragments of walls; and foundations are discovered in the adjoining meadows: but the most curious vestige of the ancient buildings is a ruinous chapel, at the south east corner of the church, now used as a place of burial, of which the windows, still well preserved, furnish examples of the lancet form. The gate of the monastery is nearly entire, and retains a few of the statues with which it was formerly furnished. The church and church-yard contain some monuments of eminent persons of former times; one is the tomb of John, brother of Ralph Nevill, the first earl of Westmoreland, and treasurer of England. The trade of Worksop, and its appendage Radford, has been much promoted by the Chesterfield canal, which passes close by the north end of the town. The population is near 5000. The market noted for malt, is held on Wednesday; and fairs March 31st. and October 14.

Post Office, Market-place, Edward Parker, Post Master.—The North Mail arrives and departs at two in the morning. The south Mail arrives and departs at half past one in the afternoon.
